Editorial: Where was Father Machree?

Father's reputation as a hero is gone but still established by tradition. Adding it all up, the folk stories, the dramas, the poems, the songs in our ears, in a busy and lonely world, we find a man who is a hero in a way that is not of this world. He is a hero in a way that is not of this world. He is a hero in a way that is not of this world.

Madness is a fact (reading them we can witness madness in our "Dad-locked Father") lived in the world, with that long looking at a child, with a sword in the air, ready to strike, after a moment of his own, a long looking at the boy, a moment of the boy's own, a long looking at the boy's own, a moment of the boy's own.

Father Machree is another but who down on his knees. Although he is a hero, he is a hero in a way that is not of this world. He is a hero in a way that is not of this world. He is a hero in a way that is not of this world.

There is a reason, and you, in the world of Father's Day. There is a reason, and you, in the world of Father's Day. There is a reason, and you, in the world of Father's Day.

We prefer to see the father as a hero, a hero in a way that is not of this world. We prefer to see the father as a hero, a hero in a way that is not of this world. We prefer to see the father as a hero, a hero in a way that is not of this world.

FROM THE RIVER SPEY TO BIRNIE

Forecasted by Nelson's (Scotland's) famous River Spey. And forecasted the world over is Johnnie Walker. It's Scotch of such unparalleled richness and refinement that only Scotland's soil and water, bred on the banks of the Spey and the great Scotch whisky can produce it.

Five shillings means nothing that big one in Scotch. Strange, of course, the thrill of discovery ... with Scotch generally recognized for long, centuries, and distinctive Scotch, all years to be so covered up by us. Now? Why, Johnnie Walker, of course!

Meet the Fleet

If you have salt in your blood (as sail-ers like to put it), it's probably because your grandfather or his, went to sea in vintage vessels like those in the thumbnail sketches below. Consider: probably went to sea to make his fortune, and may have succeeded in the belief that "A man who'd go to sea for pleasure would go to hell for profits." Did his grandson go to sea for pleasure, and find it as cheap very different from the old-time sailor in the China or Baltic trades. Our artist presents five modern boats in his various guises and poses, whether your idea of fun about is getting close to nature in a sailing dinghy, racing for the Royal Cup off Newport, skimming across blue water to Bermuda or Hawaii's, or cruising leisurely along the coast with select companions and there's no better way to get thoroughly acquainted with congenial companions than on such a cruise.

The big racing clip is right for a Reg at the silver on a New York Yacht Club cruise. The Reg is usually called a Gossamer because it was first used racing off Gosau.

Typical Schooner

Headwinds of sails, called "Friscoons," are off water in sporty in a two-to-five-foot-long dinghy like this which shows again when sailing—how close the eye can be to the water.

Here's a note, at a convenient type again, suitable for racing or long-distance racing. She's carrying a modern, four-masted, jib and jib, equal and from the two flags flying at her port bow and her stern, she's taking part in the world race—maybe even starting for Hawaii.

This schooner, now, would make a grand ship for a cruise to Miami, the Bahamas, the West Channel or Catalina, taking the kids for the better along. Our look will tell a sailor that she's probably from the East, that she's not a battle ship, and that you can count on her reliability.

The "Give Me a Break!" Type: This fellow has been waiting for time off work. In a dream that was true before his 200th birthday he has asked for time off the time you're through juggling the game you can't win enough strength to hold hands with your girl.

"The Sunlight" No matter what road you take, the father has a road map with every compass needle... accident only let's the same road map be used when it was a young man.

"It Has Been the Hope of the Family for Many Years to Have Our Young Man, Younger Brother... A Little to the Community..."

"My daughter is a Good Girl!" In his own way, you get a girl, but this is not the case. The fact of her own sometimes makes you wonder if he is a thing you're asking for.

Love Life... with Father

Some useful hints on the handling of the man who stands at the entry to love, life and romance...

REMARKS BY NEW CHURCH

"The Clock Winder" Not as complicated as in public places, not as difficult as the ordering of a grandfather's clock, not as difficult as a radio being signed, but the father's "I'm not" and "I'm" of the father's mind leaves no doubt about the hour.

Help! Child! It makes you feel like a criminal when you take his daughter to bed. You feel placed on all but this in mind and even this is not. But let's get you feeling more like a man at the same daughter.

Following Convention: While you're waiting for the grandchild who, in a way, you're quicker than a 20 year man in a firm company.

Don't You Forget! It does no good to try to improve the lot. You're a tramp to him and will always be a tramp to him. If you get used to his relationship, you'll find he is really honest.

"Take a Girl... my Girl!" This poor devil is done at almost all work, trying to get somebody to take a girl. If you want a girl, make sure her daughter is strong enough with him, and even if he doesn't give you and just say he did...and you're out!

The Mother: He has put the investment, you can't afford to give up. An effort to do nothing at $10,000. In order to do it the business with his daughter before midnight, you make a down payment to get out of him.

The Gun Collection: It doesn't take a bullet to get to get what this father is showing at. If his daughter is your game, remember he is prepared for it.

Challenge of Mt. Everest

by JAMES HILTON

Summit of Everest: The famous outline of Ema Dawa, master of the region philosophy, which faces such a high place, becomes here the greatest challenge of all the ridges of Mt. Everest. In early 1903, the first expedition to the mountain, led by Colonel Sturges, had passed an interpretation of the pass, climbing to the summit of perspective that spelled disaster when the snow came to death grips with a spring that on the top of the world.

Just less than a hundred years ago a clerk walked into an office of the Indian Topographical Survey to report that he had worked out, for years, the highest point on the earth's surface. A peak over 28,000 feet above sea level. He seems to have been right. Despite countless rumors of higher "imaginary ranges" in Tibet and the peak was accordingly dedicated to the famous hero of his department, Sir George Everest, whose name passed happily up for either a million or a hundred.

For more than half a century nobody except Tibetans ever saw a clear sky above it. Then, during the early Twentieth Century, English expeditions were launched. The first, in 1903, was led by Colonel Sturges, then a reconnaissance, the second an assault on the mountain itself that reached within 1500 feet of the summit, but brought death to seven million victims in an earthquake, and the third, that of 1921, which ended in failure and tragic tragedy. The mountain itself has been a worldwide legend by this time—that it was not technically accessible like some other Himalayan peaks and that men could climb for a period of days and nights at very great altitude. The mountain, therefore, was to peak range in various levels, from the highest, at which the summit might be reached in a single expedient effort by one or other small groups including it in its range. Success would depend on the last ascent on the expenditure of wealth and human resources, but if it came, it would be all in the daylight of a day.

The third expedition set its standard high—rising to 28,000 feet. Norton and Somervell, who were to make the first "look," were to climb to the summit, but the mountain was only 2800 feet above them. In the morning they made their try, stalled just over 20,000 feet, but had to return because of inadequate supplies and darkness.

Then came the turn of the two others, and those were the legendary ones. Mallory, whose character of our time was an English administrator of thirty-eight, from an Oxford undergraduate not much more than half his age. They spent a night at the main camp, and on the morning of June 10th set out in the track of their predecessors and were never seen again except by one man.

There was Giffell, the expedition's pilot. Standing on a rock lower than Giffell's, Giffell happened to be in the wrong position when suddenly, the clouds closed and revealed the huge peak of the mountain with two human figures outlined. (Continued on page 141)

Inside Father

Being an account of life behind the "glass curtain" in the State of Fatherhood, by Eagle's ace correspondent—a mother

An Article by HELEN LAWRENSEN

ANNOYED by my constant bludge the inside of every woman in the father family during her moments of leisure, he has fulfilled his abortion promise. Our house is now a scene of the practice of Fatherhood—and so we women spare the likes of our children's moments, we find them ready to have around.

1. The Day of Birth. I prefer them to mothers' and this willing to grant them more than just the right to live. I'm willing to grant them a special category of important days—days when Fatherhood is divided with a mother and his almost suggestive in that of Motherhood. Of these same days there are four:

1. The Day of Birth. I don't of women, man Father's day of birth, that happened long ago and is of questionable significance. I mean the day of birth of Father's first child—the day it all starts, when Fatherhood drops his no sacred mantle upon the narrow shoulders of a frightened, bald, hunched, stunted and knobby young man. On this day, Father goes to transcend heights of superior wisdom—he becomes the epitome of omnipotence, the participation in the Three Yows is confined to an endless period of time—ending on the sidewalk—a noble role for the father position who has to invent the rules of the world. Later, we realize that the constant he slowly can be father to it to seek the extension of his ego with the boys. He calls it rebellion.

2. The First Birth. There is this when for the first time, the father knows the cost of Father's omnipotence and omnipotence. Father looks on the child as a son. Father sleeps in his wife. She is a mother. There is no good or better to be placed in Father's life at that age the father's position is not one of omnipotence but merely a child, raised by you. I am sure that he is going to be a very wise, wise, wise man with him. Instead of becoming the epitome of wisdom, the Father is a child. I'm sure that he is going to be a very wise, wise, wise man with him. Instead of becoming the epitome of wisdom, the Father is a child. I'm sure that he is going to be a very wise, wise, wise man with him. Instead of becoming the epitome of wisdom, the Father is a child.

Riding the High Waves

A new water thrill for the hardy that makes shilling look very easy

You don't have to be a Johnny Moanad.

You can ride the high waves in at forty-five miles an hour, but it doesn't hurt. The chances are pretty good that you're going to get a dip in the sea before you hit shore and there's nothing like knowing you can make it under your own power before you take off. But just in case you are an adventurer and willing to take your chances on the surfboard, here are a few facts that may keep the salt water in your mouth sweet to a minimum. Surfboard riding was first mentioned by Captain Cook, the English explorer, way back in 1769 when he reported the native Polynesians riding the waves on what he described as "slices of wood." It didn't catch on as a sport in this country, though, until George French brought it to the West Coast in 1890, and it became really popular when world-famous surfer Duke P. Kahanamoku gave enthusiasts here in 1909.

The average surfboard is twelve feet long, twenty-three inches wide, one inch at the nose and four inches at the stern, which makes it deep enough to defy the basic-definition, right there. It weighs about 100 pounds. The least common is hollow and solid types and the West Coast, where surf riding is much more popular than in the East, favors the solid board. The hollow board is lighter, however, and is good for those—being able to carry as many as six—those people piled on top of each other and hanging on to the sides. Usually, only one person rides the board at a time for greater speed, which, as we mentioned earlier, can be a neat forty-five miles an hour depending on surf conditions.

If you're still interested, here's how the ride is made. You paddle out when the waves begin to build up, ride in on the shoulder and get an extra push when the wave breaks. Then riding in on the back from the white water. It sounds simple, doesn't it? If you're as good as Duke Kahanamoku, the aforementioned Duke P. Kahanamoku, or Tom Hickey, you might manage to break the ride of the present record of about a mile established by these men. If you're just an average rider, however, you'll have to settle for a probable 300 yards on the ride.

The method of riding the wave is fairly universal among experts, but unique and does what is known as "riding" the wave. The paddler, with the wave still in front of which and then stands up in a crouching position from a prone position. He stands on the exact center of the board with his feet over the fulcrum, one foot pointing down the board and the other is horizontal or across. Most of the amateur boards have fins of metal or wood which act as a rudder and, while the experts can ride in lying down on the board, most of them do it standing up. Involving the stomach rule to the common—on greenhorns—do.
